ANOTHER WIN FOR 'MYSTERIOUS BILL.'

Puts Australian Billy Edwards Out in the Fourteenth Round.

FAST AND ROUGH WORK.

One of the Fiercest Battles Ever Seen in the Lenox Athletic Club's Arena.

A few friends, people who like the rain and some others, saw the greatest fight last night that has yet occurred in the Lenox Club.

"Mysterious" Billy Smith and Billy Edwards put up the battle, and it was worth the swim to see.

Edwards was as strong as a cub bear, and recuperates like Sharkey. He is the canniest and the most willing yet seen in this vicinity. He looked to be beaten no less than three times, but stayed through an awful grueling to the fourteenth. Then Bill put it on him fair and he took the nap. The cries of foul were frequent, as the men fought Queensberry rules, but White was the referee and knew best. It was fast and rough at times, but on only one or two occasions did either man really offend, and as in no case was a harm done they were cautioned and told to go on. Smith won fair, and it's up to the next week.

The preliminary was a ten-round affair between a couple of wee ones, Tut Riley and George Ross, at 108 pounds. The decision was a draw.

The welter came forth in due time, the Australian arriving first. Smith followed closely with a swarm of seconds, Harry Fattie, Billy Hennessey, Bill Neeldham, etc. Edwards was cared for by Tom Borrower and Tom Williams, both of Australia. Edwards looked fit, if nothing more. The betting was 100 to 70 on Smith. The route was to be twenty rounds, the weight 140 pounds. Charley White officiated as the referee. The men fought straight Marquis of Queensberry rules.

Edwards, brown as a "Jap," got into action swiftly and started Smith till the lead came. It was a hot effort, but did no good. The Australian labored his left to the wind a second later and he came to a struggling clinch with a cheer. They went it hard, Smith driving the right to the body like a triphammer. Edwards knew a thing or two himself, and he was not without serious damage. Smith came again with the left, then right. Edwards got the left and then right, but Smith's right reached first, and Edwards dropped to his knees. He took eight seconds and got up, but Smith piled on top of him and down he went again. The count, again Smith's wild roughing and down again. At each time he came back Smith was rougher, and the crowd yelled "Gouge" until Smith was just rough, nothing more. Edwards was down, up, down, up, trying a jab now and then and staying in the ring.

In the next round he got his breath in spite of Bill's best efforts, and in the fourth made a fight. It was the roughest, hardest, and the most exciting yet seen in the arena. Smith got Edwards' right hand in trouble, but the Australian got to Bill's body with the right and to the face with the left. Edwards was not so much as a man, many a tough jab, but they were fighting most of the time in spite of it. Edwards was game and never flinched. He gave Bill a name all the time.

Edwards grew better fast. He went through the seventh without particular harm in spite of Smith's very best. He drove one right-hand punch over Smith's head that weighed a ton, and his left got to the face at times. Bill was there to settle it with every clinch, but the Australian was not only sturdy, but a blocker and strong as a young ox.

In the next he came Smith coming with a straight left that cut his mouth and made him bleed nicely. Billy went it hard, hand, head, bang, the best he could. But Edwards was there in every clinch to land him back in kind. The ninth was slower. Smith had been making the pace and waiting for Edwards. The Australian danced in and out with jabs for the body until Bill cut loose. Then it was furious. Smith let it go with both hands and drove them in with a free hand to a fare-you-well.

The tenth showed Edwards better than in the first. He and Smith were both in the ring. Smith was not at anything, the stronger. They were both anxious to land settlers or nothing and in consequence both missed many a good blow.

In the eleventh Smith, whose left had been practically idle at long range, caught Edwards with a swing and all but stopped him. Over came the right and he dropped. His nose was in bad shape, the right had dazed him, but he came back to it willingly. Smith came after him, but Edwards' left stopped him and the danger was over.

In the next Smith did his best to stop him, but Edwards was strong and made it interesting all the way. Smith cut to him with the left to the head and his free right hand pounded away at the body indistinctly, but Edwards was strong, the strongest man Smith has yet tackled. He landed Smith in the body and got the right home a bit himself.

It went on the roughest and hardest fight ever known in the Lenox Club. They drove at each other to break things, and the referee was busy as a bee. Smith was the aggressor, trying at the old tricks that have won him so many times. He was like a wild man, at every opportunity. The Australian tried again and again to stay close and did it, but the pace was too hot and he invariably broke after an exchange or two. His judgment of distance was not good and his right never got the speed it should on account of his propensity to hook it.

It ended suddenly in the fourteenth. Smith tried the left straight for the face again and again, but the Australian broke ground and it fell short. Bill kept coming, mixing and on the breaks trying with the left before he mixed again. Finally he let Edwards to believe his right was lost, and the kangaroo left a chance. He had broken ground just enough to escape the left and was smiling. Bill let the right loose and came in like a bear, but he was not the proper spot, and Edwards stumbled backward and fell in his corner with his hand over his "wee" rope. His eyes opened suddenly as the count reached seven. He struggled to rise, but could not control his legs, and sank back awkwardly. "Nine, ten, out," came the words, but he still struggled like a game animal. Never did a man grow more game than Billy Edwards, of Australia.

JOCKEY DEAN'S LAST RIDE.

Killed at New Orleans on Mount Washington in Final Race.

By Frank J. Bryan.

New Orleans, La., Jan. 24.—A. Dean, who has been working for John McCafferty all the season, was killed while riding Mount Washington in the closing event. His horse was first away, and rounding the backstretch he was second and apparently running easy. Suddenly horse and boy went down, and there was a rush to the scene of the accident. It was found the horse had ruptured a blood vessel, but with the boy matters were more serious. He was carried into his employer's stable and every effort made to revive him, but he died without regaining his senses. Death was due to a fracture of the base of the skull. The boy's mother and stepfather live in Kaufman, Texas, where the remains will be sent.

O'Connor rode to-day after a rest of three days. His absence from the saddle apparently had good effects, for he piloted two winners during the afternoon, one of them a 25 to 1 chance, E. S. Gardner, a gelding, ridden by J. H. Lickok. This is a pretty useful sort of a filly, and properly placed she is sure to pay her way. The day's results were again costly to the players. In the first and second races the favorites managed to get home in front and there were hopes that at last the chance to recoup had arrived, but the hope was short lived, as for the remainder of the day it was the old story of unlooked for results.

Sir Florian was dist of the day's winners. He looked to outclass his field, and this calculation proved correct, for when O'Connor was ready he came to the front and won in good style. Plunger O'Brien, who has been sick with the grip, was on hand to back Mispah, but Jim McCreary, a 10 to 1 chance, easily beat him out for second money.

Volandies was next of the favorites, and he captured the second race, but was far from the certainty it had been counted for. He just did get home, beating Neller a head in the jump before the finish. The last named was in front, Sicilia was third, four lengths back.

The third race was the hurdle handicap. Seven started and five finished. The race was a decidedly crude-looking three-year-old, bolting over the track rails at one point, and the crowd was not in the last of the race. The winner was solely through his ability to outjump Jim Hogg. The latter was watching him fast.

Volandies was heavily played, but those palm-tipped fences ended any chance he had. He was not a horse proposition when there is any jumping to be done. Pierce, who rode Provera, was considerably shaken up by his fall.

Old Redskin furnished one of his semi-occasional surprises by capturing the fourth race. The few that backed him cashed in. He was a 20 to 1 chance, and he won in 1:28 1/2. John Baker, Fintan, Erskel, Broom Vell, Elkin and Mispah also ran. Start fair. Run easily by a scant length, four lengths between second and third.
